occupied by Messrs. Carrick & Coles, and set to work to develop the fine business site on the opposite side. The architect, Mr. W. David Hartley, F.R.I.B.A., of Slough, and the directors have worked in conjunction with the administrative bodies in planning the site, and have succeeded in producing a scheme which, while permitting the business to be continued without hindrance, enables the departments to be extended naturally as the additional floor space becomes available.

The policy of the directors in developing the business into the modern store will enable the shopping public to use it as such by walking round and inspecting the merchandise. No influence will be brought to effect a purchase.

Miss Uxbridge of 1937—and Mr. Uxbridge, too—have nothing but praise for the shopping facilities concentrated in this large store, which should be completed as one huge scheme before the end of next year.

A year ago the firm extended their Slough store, doubling the floor space and modernising it to meet the demands of the shopping public of South Bucks.
