Stand-in compère stole the show

Dick Bentley should have compered the charity fashion show organised by Chalfont Young Conservatives on Saturday but at the last minute was unable to come.

But even he could not have been funnier than the Y.C. who gallantly stepped in to take his place at the last minute, Richard Jupp. Mr. Jupp was obviously not a fashion expert, but he managed to keep the audience laughing and informed. "This model takes a size 16 but the clothes are so good it doesn't show," was typical of the comments he made. The models took it in good part and Suters of Slough and Breakaway of Amersham who provided the clothes cannot have been less than delighted with his remarks.

Suters showed a charming and varied selection of spring clothes. They were the sort of elegant clothes which flatter anyone. Swinging fashion which was at the same time classic, dateless and ageless was the keynote of their selection.

Breakaway, Amersham's modern boutique, caters more distinctively for the younger set. The clothes they showed were super, extravagant to look at, but not overpriced and definitely only for the "with it" woman.

Four of the five models were young Conservatives who are professional models. They were Andrea Carter, 20-year-old membership secretary of Chorleywood Y.C.s, Mary Loughton, aged 20, of Essex, Christine Stonnard, of Orpington, Kent, and Jane Carr, aged 18, of Kensington.

The £30 raised by the show at Amersham Council Chambers will go to the N.S.P.C.C. Other branches who helped with organisation were Amersham, Beaconsfield, Chesham, Chorleywood and Gerrards Cross.
